

PROJECTS

Location: Kent

Business Type: Independent Girls School

Project: Telephone System Renewal

Our client, a renowned independent school for girls, was about to purchase a new Voice over Internet Protocol (VoIP) telephone system to replace an aged analogue system but were being given conflicting information by the three potential suppliers about aspects of the cabling requirement.

Consequently the School approached Network Computing for an opinion and engaged us to assist with supplier determination.

It quickly became clear, however, that the School's installed network infrastructure would not support VoIP without extensive investment, and in discussion the Schools expectations and requirements proved to be relatively simple and did not justify the direction that they were being compelled to consider.

Under our guidance a new Digital telephone system has been installed which provides every function that they were unable to achieve on their old system, and includes them having the ability to undertake their own simple administration without incurring cost or delay.

Not only has this system considerably less-expensive than any of the three original VoIP proposals, it is capable of expansion to VoIP at a later date too should their circumstances or requirements ever change.
